EVER AFTER

At the corner of Warwick and Brewer Street, high atop the rooftops, where the city below seemed distant, like a flickering tapestry of lights and whispers was Yasmin’s sanctuary. Soho was her playground, a mosaic of cultures, sounds, and smells that made her feel more alive than anywhere else in the world. The streets below bustled with life—an endless parade of music, laughter, and conversation in a dozen different languages. This was where the world came together, Yasmin thrived in its electricity...
